I, Brian Eliot, will my ability to get along with the English teacher to Dick Randol.

I, Bill Eversole, will my height to Bill Link.

I, Jane Hinton, will my deep devotion for school to Karen Masterson.

I, Dianne Lund, will to Marsha Palmer the ability to stay in the Link family.

I, Jim Nelson, will my ability to skip school to any Junior boy that wants to try it.

I, Ladonna Ralston, will the back seat in the corner to Candy Snyder.

I, Harold Resler, will my ability to play basketball to David Bailey.

I, Beverly Seabolt, will my low grades in typing to Sharon Kitt, and my ability to flirt with the boys to Kay Lahr.

I, Bob Seabolt, will my ability to drive to school when not in trouble to Larry Shroyer.

I, John Stockman, will my ability to stay out late at night to Mark Brown.

I, Wayne Stults, will my ability to forget everything but my head to Larry Shrock.

I, Donna Thomas, will to any Junior Girl the ability to chew gum in Shorthand Class and not get caught.
Good Luck, Girls!

I, Mike Walker, will my ability to set up experiments in Chemistry without killing myself to Lynette Jordan.

I, Betty Watson, will to Sue Allen the ability not to get caught chewing gum during chorus practice.

I, Dan West, will my temper to Wanda Ralston.

Class Prophecy

As we look into the crystal ball, we find the year 1973. We are now in the steaming metropolis of Markle, Indiana, waiting to board the Jet monorail, now a subsidiary of the Erie Monorail Service, owned and operated by Bob Seabolt. We jumped aboard just in time for the crystal ball to go hazy. As it clears, we find ourselves cruising through the countryside. As we look down, we see the million dollar farm owned by Brian Eliot, which was willed to him by his long lost uncle.

Upon reaching New York, we find Wayne Stults, the former Rock Creek trombonist, now playing in the Philharmonic Orchestra. As we walk toward the Astor Hotel, we run into the noted interior decorator, Miss Ladonna Ralston, looking over her morning newspaper. We glance over her shoulder finding Jayde Brumbaugh, now the new editor of the New York Times. We glance on down the page where we recognize a former classmate, Miss Betty Watson, who has won a Nobel prize for being the most outstanding professor in the field of Literature.

We walk into the hotel where we read on the bulletin board that the name soon will be changed from the Astor to the Eversole, which will be owned and operated by Bill Eversole. As we walk up to the desk to register, we notice Mr. Danny West getting his mail. He is now living in a suite with his wife Kaye, while designing a new edition to the White House. Walking down the corridor, we run into Dr. Mike Walker. He is in New York picking up supplies for his animal clinic in Boston.

After finishing our tour of New York, we decided to head west. The first stop is back at our home county. There we find Beverly Seabolt, now Beverly Wilburn, living with her husband on their farm. As we board our plane again, we decide to take a look up front, where we find our pilot to be Steve Brown.

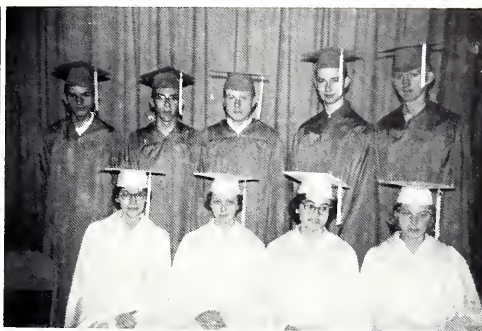

As we circle Chicago getting ready to land, we notice a small white Simca stranded on the freeway. What do you know--it's Donna Thomas and her cousin Kathy headed for New York. We land at Municipal Airport for a stop over to catch the next plane and decide to have a cup of coffee. In the next booth beside us sits Miss Jane Hinton sipping on a cup of coffee also. Jane is now an airline stewardess.

Our plane arrives at the airport so we jump aboard and head for California. Upon reaching California we look up a former classmate, Miss Diane Davis. She is now a noted hair stylist in Hollywood. After leaving her salon, we see Jim Nelson. Jim is now a designer for Cunningham Aircraft Corporation.

We stop off for a bite to eat, and the restaurant seems to be full of familiar faces. First we meet Mrs. Robert Link, the former Dianne Lund. She lives in Southern California with her husband on their ranch. Next we see John Stockman, an electronic engineer for the government. He is presently working in San Diego. Also we meet Harold Resler, who is furthering his education in atomic energy at a California University.

The crystal ball fogs up again and an out to lunch sign appears, so we take the hint and close our little journey.
